

Long Term Complications of Lupus-Controlling Drugs

By: Melissa Hawkins-Holt MD & Violeta Rus MD

Many drugs are successfully used to treat lupus; however, it is important to understand all the possible complications associated with these medications to ensure vitality. This article addresses the effects of non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs (NSAID's), corticosteroids, antimalarials and immunosuppressive drugs. It provides a list of symptoms associated with each drug and explains the related area of organ damage. Each drug produces its own unique side effects. It is important to become aware of the damage these lupus treating drugs may cause, so that you can bring any symptoms to your doctors attention immediately.